THE CURTAIN AT ROUSE.

The city of Rouen possesses, amongst the many other historical treasures, several very ancient bells in the magnificent old belfry, and up to about eighteen months ago every evening, at nine o'clock, the curfew was solemnly rung by a bell of great antiquity locally known as the "after bell," but the proper title of which, according to the inscription it bears, is La Rouelle.

About eighteen months ago La Rouelle, after centuries of service, suddenly cracked, and the curfew which had been nightly rung since the days of William the Conqueror ceased. The falling caused locally at this cessation of an ancient custom was great, but for a considerable time there was no way out of the difficulty.
However, the bells of Rouen have been rearranged, and the curfew once more sounds at nine o'clock. Another ancient bell of almost equal dimensions to Rouelle, the Cacho Riband, which formerly rung the hours, is sounding the curfew, whilst a new and modern arrival, La Normande, rings the hour. La Rouelle remains in the belfry a curiosity, and a link with the past upon which, in her relief, the old Gothic inscription can still be read, "My name is Rouelle. The founder made me proud."

THE JAPANESE RED CROSS.

Miss McCall's Opinion.

Rouelle's representative has had an interview with Miss McCall, who was received recently by the Queen of her return from a mission to the Far East, having for its object the study of the Japanese Red Cross Society. A detailed Report of the Japanese Military nursing system is now in the hands of her Majesty.
Miss McCall, who gave her services as a volunteer in South Africa during the Boer War, left England early in the present year, and was absent six months. Her journey was under the auspices of the Queen, by whom it was sanctioned, and was made with the full permission of the Japanese Government. Miss McCall said:—"There can be no doubt that the Japanese are ahead of us in the matter of surgical and medical outfit, and most certainly in the management of field hospitals. This is due to the tremendous forethought and wonderful inventiveness of the Japanese. Yet rigid economy is observed. We have, indeed, many useful lessons to learn from them. The equipment of the hospitals is magnificent, and the fact that their system goes like clock work is due to the intense esprit de corps amongst all their medical men.
I was thoroughly delighted with what I saw of the care of the wounded. The medical advice and nursing skill of the Japanese are wonderful. No women nurses are allowed at the front, all the work being done by men. During war the female nurses are drafted into the big reserve and stationary hospitals in Japan, where they replace the male nurses, who are depended on in the front. They are all Red Cross Nurses, and are kept as a reserve."

Asked about the charges of cruelty, and the use of dum-dum and explosive bullets, Miss McCall said:—"I never saw or heard of explosive bullets. Both among the Russian and Japanese wounded I found that the bullet holes were just like those made by Mauser bullets, being very small and clean, wounds, which healed very quickly. The Japanese gave me a complete infantry equipment and a collection of ambulance appliances to bring home to show to people in England. It is, however, a curious thing that I could not obtain a bullet. All these extracted from the wounded are carefully kept as the property of the Government, and are arranged in cases."

Summing up her remarks, Miss McCall added:—"The Japanese admitted to me that they had learnt many useful lessons from the South African War, and thereby been able to improve their own system.
The perfect organization and discipline to be seen everywhere in Japan, even down to the minutest detail, form object lessons, and I am sure that the Japanese nation will be able to do much for the world."

Miss McCall also said that the Japanese troops were very pleased at Queen Alex-andra's interest in their nursing system, and that in this respect the Mission had had a beneficial effect on Japanese public opinion.

A few days ago we referred to the power-recently formed among the merchants of Canton in connection with the Chamber of Commerce, on which the twenty-two trades of the city have their representatives. We pointed out that the corporation was one whose influence would be widely felt, because it has brought within its purview all the important towns of the provinces, and will have no stone unturned to foster and develop native trade, and in the struggle that is to come for supremacy, it is frankly stated that it will compete with foreigners wherever and whenever possible. It is, however, gratifying to learn that whilst the Cantonese merchants have stated their ambitions thus clearly and are determined to reach them, they also understand that, in order to do this, the first thing—if native trade is to be developed—is to attack the present status quo of things, and especially as it concerns the dense ignorance of the people. The promoters of the corporation see clearly enough, and state bluntly enough, that ignorance is the barrier that stands in the way of all progress, and that, therefore, it must be grappled with and dispelled.

The regulations of the present guilds must be relaxed because they are harmful. The belief in Fung Shui hinders the building of lofty chimneys, the laying down of effective machinery, the erection of powerful saw-mills, and the opening of mines. Therefore, the belief in Fung Shui must be undermined, and that can only be effected by the dissemination of useful knowledge.

Further, to-day, because of the filthy language used, and the innuendoes made, no woman will work in manu-

All this must be put a stop to, and
